I'm tempted to learn Interlingua. It looks easy and it is supposed to be highly comprehensible by speakers of an actual Romance language.

Looking things up on YouTube, it seems that claim has weight, even for French speakers (to an extent). In my extremely limited research, it seems like Romanians might have the easiest time with it spoken, and pretty much the entire Romance language family has an easy time with it written.

It's also supposed to be a decent jumping-off point for learning specific Romance languages after, while being loads easier (and in particular, it is explicitly designed to be relatively easy for an English speaker to learn).

...unfortunately, I am still in the middle of learning Japanese, but I am a bit tired of running up against how hard it is. (´ω´)

Very tempted to give this a go. (´▽´)

In my experience, language learning is a solo activity. Yes, at some point you'll need to practice speaking, but in general, you'll already know the language to a decent extent by that point. (´ω`) outside of that, it's just grinding it out by yourself (・▽・)
